Kiato sits on the Corinthian Gulf about an hour and twenty minutes west of Athens, with a suburban railway station five minutes from the building that runs direct to the city. Xylokastró is fifteen minutes along the coast, Corinth twenty-five, Athens International Airport an hour thirty-five. The town centre is two to three minutes away and the seafront promenade is the building's own address.

A contemporary six-storey building directly on the Kiato Port waterfront, thirty one-bedroom residences from roughly 38 to 64 m² total area. Ground-floor units come with gardens of 16.5 and 42 m²; the floors above have balconies of 4 to 13 m², most oriented to the water. Interiors use warm timber, full-height glazing, marble-finish bathrooms with matte black fittings and integrated kitchens. A single penthouse occupies the sixth floor.

The threshold follows the zone and the route

Kiato is in Corinthia, outside Attica, and this is a new-build rather than a conversion — so the applicable threshold is set by the zone and by the route, and has to be established for the specific unit before it can be relied on. The €250,000 level is not location-based and does not apply to new-build stock. We confirm the position in writing for any buyer whose purchase depends on residency eligibility.

RENTAL OUTLOOK

The letting case here is seasonal rather than year-round: the Corinthian Gulf summer runs from May to October and short-let rates over that window are well above the long-term equivalent. Indicative long-let income starts around €1,047 per month. Running costs on a one-bedroom unit are low, which is what makes a part-year letting pattern work.
